What Is Beoble ?

Beoble is a web3 application that is compatible with most major wallets, allowing users to exchange messages between wallets. Users can use Metamask or other wallets to sign in and send messages to other users, create groups and earn rewards.

More than just a messaging platform, Beoble is a haven for privacy, security, and seamless integration with a decentralized ecosystem. While enabling smooth communication, Beoble also protects users' privacy.

How Does Beoble Work?

Beoble enhances social connectivity through the Communication Delivery Graph (CDG), a cutting-edge network designed to prioritize security and privacy. In addition to using a decentralized network for data storage, Beoble further ensures that the information transaction process is completely private and secure through CDG. As CDG is constructed as a delivery mechanism, users retain full control and ownership of their data throughout the process.

Besides guaranteeing the privacy and security in messages, Beoble facilitates the creation of decentralized identities (DIDs), allowing users fully control and manage their DIDs and eliminating the need for a central authority. Besides, Beoble offers a social graph synchronizer, so users can seamlessly sync contacts from other networks, such as Lens Protocol and Cyber Connect.

What Is The BBL Token?

BBL is the native utility token of the Beoble platform, and the token standard is ERC-20. BBL tokens allow the chatroom economy to innovate and circulate.

Beoble allows users to earn points (Cat points) through interaction, and users accumulate share of the chat room based on their positive contributions. The more they participate, the more their share of their chat rooms increases, thus ensuring that any revenue (including entrance fees) generated by the chat rooms is distributed fairly among the members.

Following the official launch, Beoble has renamed the CAT token to BBL. BBL generated through participation can be redeemed for the purchase of utilities, access to advanced features, play games, or donate to other users to foster community awareness and rewards.
